ED Access to critical info

- Each additional unnecessary lab is painful to the patient and an opportunity for infection. Each time we reduce the duplicate lab, the patient is healthier and decreases their activity in the healthcare system.
- In addition to the above, who needs to pay an extra copay for a duplicate test? Nobody; nobody should have to. Your doctors having access to your current Labs reduce the opportunity for duplicate services.
- Taking the guess work out of handwritten medication lists and what medications are active and who prescribed them, accurate medication documenting takes the burden off of the patient for remembering who, when, why and what, and places the information in the hands of the care team that needs it, accurately.
- Sharing information between your providers, increasing transparency about your healthcare activities eliminates the guesswork about your care and shares critical info cross-provider to save healthcare dollars and keep you healthy.
- Duplicate testing is wasteful source of healthcare dollars increasing patient premiums and wasting your time. Providing access to your test results via CurrentCare reduces duplicate testing
- When you or someone you love is unconscious in the ED of a Rhode Island hospital without anyone to share your allergies, medications or recent healthcare information, CurrentCare is there for that ED to use, making sure your information is accessed when you need care
